The Leas, looking West.—The Leas is the western section of the fine Marine Drive and Promenade extending nearly seven miles along the sea shore, all the more attractive because it runs, between Leigh and Southend, at the foot of well-wooded cliffs. Viewed from the Leas, Westcliff presents a very charming and picturesque appearance, while looking west one sees the fishing fleet of Leigh, suggestive of shrimps and cockles which are world-famous, and the wooded cliff is crowned by the noble tower of Leigh Parish Church, looking down as it has done for nearly five centuries, on the broad estuary that leads by "London River" to the "heart of the Empire."
